Content that works.

Eight post formats we've seen perform across the network. Use them as starting points, mix them, bend them. They're here to fall back on, not to box you in.

01 The Ragebait Post

Purposefully share a wrong or hot take, or speak incorrectly about a topic. Let the comments do the work.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

02 The Association Post

Sandwich our artist in between bigger, more relevant artists from the same scene or genre.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

03 The List Post

Make a list: top 5 songs in a genre, for a specific mood or season, the events that shaped your week. Anything goes.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

04 The Inside Joke Post

Take something niche but relevant to your scene and engage your audience with it. The more niche the better: it proves you're a real member of the scene who gets the references.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

05 The "Ask the Audience" Post

Ask your viewers for opinions or recommendations while finding a way to include the artist you're promoting. Builds stronger relationships with your audience, too.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

06 The Lyric Post

Pick a lyric from the song and highlight it. Doing something in the background, whether dancing or anything else, usually performs better than a static video.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

07 The Related Post

Talk about artists or things related to the artist you're promoting without ever mentioning them. Their only appearance is their sound playing in the background.

Example ↗

08 The Event Post

React to something that just happened: a song used in a big show or film, an artist's controversial take. Know what your niche is talking about and ride the momentum.

Example 1 ↗ Example 2 ↗

Be creative.

This is your music niche, and you're the expert. Create the content you think will reach other music fans. The formats above are useful strategies to fall back on, but you're not limited to them.